federal judge on Thursday struck down a Texas law requiring voters to show a government-issued photo ID before casting a ballot in the state, ruling that the law places an "onerous and unsubstantiated burden" on voters and that it may make it harder to vote in some places. U.S. District Judge Orlando Garcia, of the Western District of Texas, said the state could defend the law by saying it's needed to prevent fraud and contends it will make it easier to prevent voter impersonation, but the law doesn't do that. Garcia's ruling came just hours before the Texas primary election day, forcing Texas officials to scramble and make contingency plans for the upcoming elections. The ruling means that officials in Texas could temporarily suspend the voter ID law ahead of the July 2 elections. "The Court finds that the photo ID requirement
